No. Ameren Missouri is not currently seeking to comply specifically with either the “moderate” or the “aggressive” environmental scenario. These scenarios represented potential futures for environmental regulation that were constructed at the time the IRP analysis was being performed and based on assessments at that time of what the rules might eventually require. Since that time some rules have reached or neared finalization and are now different than what was represented in either of the scenarios used for the IRP. Ameren Missouri continues to monitor the development of rules and is incorporating an updated analysis of environmental compliance into its 2012 IRP annual update.
